For the Mercury. THE TWO PATRIOTS BY W. R. DRLANY.

There stood a blue syed, fair haired boy. Heelds his mother's knee, His hands a goodly volume held -

'Twas Erin's History ; Mamma, I'll read," the youngster said, " That famous tale of yore, How Brian broke the Danish roke,

On Clontarf's sandy shore, It must have been a glorious sight " It was, my child," quoth she,

"To view, with banners, swords and spears, Old Erin's chivalry, In full career aweep proudly o'er

While wild and high arose the cry-Death ! Death unto the Dane! Oh! but it was a gallant sight ! And yet a saddening one

That memorable plain.

Though victory crowned King Brian's arms, Alas! 'twas dearly won ; For in his tent where Brian sat-Too old to join the strife-Some coward hand, with murderous brand, Bereft him of his life."

Base, cruel toos, Mamma, they were, The poor old king to kill, If I had been a man and there, His blood they should not spill. To shield the aged monarch's life, I would the wratches fight, For scripture says that God always,

Mamma defends the right.

But if my sword preserved the king, How proud, Mamma, I'd be, When he before his warriors bold Would praise my loyalty. Or if I failed his life to save, I'll tell you what I'd do, Then bravely I would fighting die, Along with King Boru.

I hope that they who murdered him, Did not unpunished go ; Rejoiced I'd be to hear, Mamma, The cowards were laid low. · His death, my child, was well avenged, As well it ought to be, For every Dane who was not alain Did perish in the sea.

And Denmark did long, bitterly, That bloody fight deplore ; Her bravest sons were strown that day Like pebbles on the shore. That morn they were a gallant host, That eve a ghastly crowd, The ocean's awell - their funeral knell, The ocean wrack their shroud.

And now, my child, the story read, The text I shall explain. Well-pleased, I know, you'll be to hear How Brian beat the Dane. And centuries since have floated by On Time's impetuous wave But Erin yet does not forget The memory of the Brave.

> For the Mercury A LITTLE GRAVE.

A little grave where daisies grow ; A little body lying low; This is all the world may know But our hearts Hold a baby sweet and fair, A little child with sunny hair, Child of tenderest love and care-

In the sweet spring of his day, We gave him to the lonely clay, From our tear-dimmed eyes away. How we loved him none can tell ; They who have loved like us, as well, Loved and lost, alone may tell ... Charlie, Charlie!

Wistful shadows in his eyes Like the dreamy haze that lies Trembling in the summer skies ! And the burden of a fear, Fell on us that weary year-

Charlie, Charlie! Shrinking from bad company, Keeping close to Mother's knee, Or in arms that tenderly Watched him fading, faded he-Faded he, our blossom fair, Our little boy with sunny hair, Child of tenderest love and care

Swift the seasons come and go; Thickly falls the drifting snow O'er a little grave we know ; Have passed in at a pearly door, Have tred the shining golden floor,

Charlie, Charlie!

Fair and fadeless evermore-Charlie, Charlie
